

A world-class bathroom

Antique wall tiles from across the globe create an interesting feature in this unique bathroom

This bathroom fits perfectly into an old Edwardian home, which has retained a lot of its original features.

The owners wanted a welcoming bathroom that felt lived-in rather than cold and clinical and that had an art deco feel.

It also brings together artwork from across the world in the shape of the colourful and eye-catching tiles that beautifully frame the antique bath.

The jumbled wall of assorted Art Nouveau tiles was created after the owners spent hours searching salvage shops, eBay and antique stores. The tiles come from places as far flung as the UK and Uruguay.

The bath — antique, freestanding and recommissioned cast-iron — is another feature that fits nicely into the era of this bathroom. It was stripped back, re-enamelled and finished with a rough, textured look.

The Shaker style vanity finished in French White with a smooth marble top and the classic chrome bath/mixer and taps also meld nicely with the vintage style. The spacious mirror above the vanity complements the theme and is an authentic art deco piece purchased from an antique shop.

The flooring completes the vintage look, as the owners chose a classic and timeless hexagonal black-and-white floor mosaic.

The spectacular wall sconce lights are also authentic art deco and were purchased from an eBay dealer in the US. Brindabella Bathrooms then modified them and got them working.

An old, red, antique armchair bought at an auction house adds cosy appeal and fits neatly into one corner of this bathroom haven.
