

GORGEOUS GEORGIAN

Reminiscent of a bygone era, this charming bathroom was designed to suit its traditional surroundings

Offering a creative alternative to traditional tiles, the timber V-jointed panel sideboards help conjure images of a bygone era.

located in an old Georgian home, the main challenge for designer John Spiteri and the Brindabella Bathrooms team was to make the new bathroom they were designing look old again.

To capture the desired look, John focused on several features exclusive to the era such as selecting timber V-jointed panels in place of tiles. While this style of work is quite common in the United States, it was an innovative way of thinking for an Australian bathroom. For a truly authentic look, the effect was finished with traditional dado capping.

Amazingly, Brindabella Bathrooms constructed the entire bathroom from scratch to fit with the original building. Layered structural compressed sheeting was utilised for the wet floor area, while the walls and doors were fashioned to blend with the Georgian theme. A range of period-style fittings such as the door trim, brass handles and tapware were precisely selected to suit the traditional décor.

A lovely view of the lush gardens from the wide, panelled windows completes the time warp. Thanks to the expert craftsmanship and execution of Brindabella Bathrooms, the owners and their guests can now sit back and enjoy their new “olden day” bathroom. LKB
